On Petition For A Writ Of Certiorari
To The Supreme Court Of Connecticut

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Anthony Rish, Petitioner, requests that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgments and opinion of the Connecticut Appellate Court entered February 7, 1989, on which the Connecticut Supreme Court denied a petition for certification on appeal on April 13, 1989.

OPINION BELOW

The opinion of the Appellate Court of Connecticut is officially reported at 17 Conn. App. 447 (1989). It is reproduced in the Appendix to this Petition beginning at App. p. A-1.

A timely petition for certification was denied by the Connecticut Supreme Court on April 13, 1989. That order was published on May 23, 1989, at 211 Conn. 802, and it is reproduced in the Appendix to this Petition beginning at App. p. B-1.

JURISDICTION

The judgments of the Connecticut Appellate Court, affirming Petitioner's two simultaneous convictions of a total of two counts of sexual assault in the second degree and two counts of risk of injury to a minor were entered in a single opinion on February 7, 1989. A timely Petition to certify an appeal was filed with the Connecticut Supreme Court and denied by that Court on April 13, 1989. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. §1257(3).

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

1. The Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides in relevant part: "Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law. . . ."

2. The Sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides in relevant part: "In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the state and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, . . . and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense."

3. Section 53-21 of the Connecticut General Statutes provides as follows: "Any person who wilfully or unlawfully causes or permits any child under the age of sixteen years to be placed in such a situation that its life or limb is endangered, or its health is likely to be injured, or its morals likely to be impaired, or does any act likely to impair the health or morals of any such child, shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than ten years or both."

4. Section 53a-71(a) (1) of the Connecticut General Statutes provides as follows: "A person is guilty of sexual assault in the second degree when such person engages in sexual intercourse with another person and such other person is . . . under sixteen years of age. . . ."

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

In two companion cases, Anthony Rish, the Petitioner here, pled guilty under the doctrine of North Carolina v. Alford, 400 U.S. 25, 29 (1970), to one count of sexual assault in the second degree and one count of risk of injury to a minor in each of the cases. Subsequent to these pleas, Petitioner changed counsel and moved to withdraw his pleas on a variety of grounds which are set forth in the opinion of the Connecticut Appellate Court. At the hearing on that motion, it was disclosed for the first time that the prosecutor had withheld exculpatory information which would have significantly undermined the credibility of an important prosecution witness. Petitioner immediately, with permission of the Court, orally amended his motion by adding the withholding of exculpatory information as a new ground, contending that he would not have pled guilty had he realized that the prosecution witness was capable of being impeached in the manner disclosed by this evidence. Specifically, the evidence showed that a key prosecution witness had been prosecuted in juvenile court during the pendency of Petitioner's case and was at that very time in a program under Court supervision. Petitioner argued that his guilty pleas were infected by due process violations in that they were entered in ignorance of this critical information which should have been disclosed to him pursuant to Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83 (1963), and Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150 (1972). The Court denied the motion, imposed sentence, and Petitioner appealed.

Affirming the judgment below, the Connecticut Appellate Court expressly held that although the evidence in question was exculpatory, there is no requirement that exculpatory information affecting the credibility of a prosecution witness be disclosed prior to trial: "The defendant is not entitled to impeachment evidence about a State's witness until the witness has been called by the State and has testified on direct examination." 17 Conn. App. 447 at 458. (Emphasis in original.) The Court relied on a provision of the Connecticut Practice Book, which regulates procedural matters in all Connecticut courts, which provides in full as follows: "After a witness called by the State has testified on direct examination, the prosecuting authority shall disclose any record of felony convictions of the witness known to the prosecuting authority and any record of felony or misdemeanor charges pending against the witness known to the prosecuting authority."

This issue was raised by a petition to the Connecticut Supreme Court to certify an appeal, but the Connecticut Supreme Court denied that petition.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

The Appellate Court's reliance on a provision of the Connecticut Practice Book in this case demonstrates that its holding extends far beyond the confines of this one matter and applies to all criminal prosecutions in the State of Connecticut. That holding is clearly contrary to established federal law and results in unfair trials in Connecticut in every criminal case in which a prosecutor possesses exculpatory information. Unless this Court intervenes, exculpatory information affecting the credibility of prosecution witnesses will never be disclosed until the conclusion of direct examination of such witnesses at trial, making the exculpatory information virtually useless to most defendants. The policy announced in this case invites, if it does not guarantee, ineffective assistance of counsel. Defense lawyers will be under intense pressure to proceed immediately with cross-examination upon receiving the exculpatory information, making that information useless in most cases. It is a rare defense attorney in this era of overcrowded criminal court dockets, who would have the temerity to request an adjournment long enough to complete the investigation, research and thinking necessary to make effective use of such impeaching evidence. It is even a rarer lawyer who will have such a request granted by busy judges attempting to cope with enormous dockets.

When this Court held in Giglio, supra, and Brady, supra, that exculpatory information of this kind must be disclosed to the defense, it presumably intended that such information be disclosed at a time when it can be useful. To hold, as Connecticut now has held, that such information is to be concealed from the defendant until literally moments before cross-examination begins is in most cases the functional equivalent of holding that it need not be disclosed at all. Every trial lawyer knows this and it is for just that reason that the lower federal courts have held consistently that such information must be disclosed at a time when it can be useful to the accused – a time when defense counsel can investigate the information and integrate it into a meaningful defense. E.g., United States v. Polisi, 416 F.2d 573, 578 (2d Cir. 1969); United States v. Kaplan, 554 F.2d 577, 580 (3d Cir. 1977); United States v. Baxter, 492 F.2d 150, 173-74 (9th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 417 U.S. 940 (1974); United States v. Pallock, 534 F.2d 964, 973 (D.C.Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 924 (1976). See also, Grant v. Aldredge, 498 F.2d 376, 381-82 (2d Cir. 1974).

It is particularly disturbing that, as in this case, an accused person should be permitted to plead guilty under the Alford doctrine, which is based upon a considered judgment that the evidence at trial makes conviction probable, without being informed of information which would undermine the credibility of prosecution witnesses and thus reduce the likelihood of conviction. The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals has held "as a matter of law" that a guilty plea entered in ignorance of such information "was not knowingly and intelligently made." Ex parte Lewis, 26 Cr.L. 2216 (Tex. Crim. App. 1979). See also, Caputo v. Henderson, 541 F.2d 979 (2d Cir. 1976); United States v. Schubert, 728 F.2d 1364 (11th Cir. 1984).

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, this Petition for a Writ of Certiorari should be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

STATE OF CONNECTICUT v. ANTHONY RISH
(6748)

DUPONT, C.J., SPALLONE and FOTI, Js.

Convicted following pleas of guilty to two counts of the crime of sexual assault in the second degree and two counts of the crime of risk of injury to a child, the defendant appealed to this court claiming that the trial court erred in denying his motions to withdraw his pleas. Held:

1. The defendant could not prevail on his claim that, since he had not been informed of the amount of fines that could be imposed for the crimes charged, he had not been advised of the maximum possible sentences as required by the rules of practice (§ 711 [4]); the trial court had advised the defendant that he would be allowed to withdraw his plea agreement, which did not contemplate fines, were not followed.

2. Notwithstanding the fact that the defendant responded in one word answers – yes or no – to the trial court's plea canvass, the transcript of that canvas unequivocally demonstrated that the pleas were entered intelligently, knowingly and voluntarily.

3. The trial court did not err in refusing to conduct an evidentiary hearing on the defendant's claim that his pleas were the result of ineffective assistance of counsel; the basis of that claim – that the defendant's counsel had failed to inform him that a guilty plea under the Alford doctrine would constitute an admission in a collateral civil proceeding – was contrary to law.

4. The defendant could not prevail on his claim that the states' failure to disclose to him before he entered his pleas certain information that would have tended to impeach a potential state's witness rendered his pleas involuntary; the defendant was not entitled to that information until after the witness testified.

5. The defendant's claim that he should have been allowed to withdraw his plea because the state would not have suffered any prejudice as a result was unavailing; the defendant failed to show a sufficient reason for withdrawal, which showing was required before an inquiry into possible prejudice to the state became necessary.

Substitute information in each case charging the defendant with the crimes of sexual assault in the second degree and injury or risk of injury to a child, brought to the Superior Court in the judicial district of New Haven, geographical area number seven, and presented to the court, Quinn, J., on pleas of guilty; thereafter, the court rendered judgment of guilty in each case, from which the defendant appealed to this court. No error.

DUPONT, C.J. In two companion cases, the defendant appeals from the denial by the trial court of his motions to withdraw his pleas entered pursuant to the Alford doctrine.[1]

[1] A plea of guilty pursuant to North Carolina v. Alford, 400 U.S. 25, 91 S. Ct. 160, 27 L. Ed. 2d 162 (1970), allows a defendant in a criminal case to consent to punishment as if he were guilty without an express acknowledgement of guilt.

In the first case, the defendant was charged with one count of sexual assault in the second degree in violation of General Statutes § 53a-71 (a) (1)[2] and one count of risk of injury to a minor in violation of General Statutes § 53-21.[3] The state claimed that the defendant had sexual intercourse with the minor victim on a regular basis, from 1980, when she was eight years old, to 1986. In the second case, the defendant was charged with one count each of a violation of the same statutes. This charge concerned the five year old cousin of the first victim.

After the trial court was satisfied that there was a sufficient factual basis for the pleas; Practice Book § 713;[4] and had canvassed the defendant pursuant to Practice Book §§ 711 and 712,[5] it accepted the defendant's pleas.

[2] General Statutes § 53a-71 provides in pertinent part: "(a) A person is guilty of sexual assault in the second degree when such person engages in sexual intercourse with another person and such other person is (1) under sixteen years of age . . . ."

[3] General Statutes § 53-21 provides in pertinent part: "Any person who willfully or unlawfully causes or permits any child under the age of sixteen years to be placed in such a situation that . . . its morals [are] likely to be impaired, or does any act likely to impair the health or morals of any such child, shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than ten years or both."

"The judicial authority shall not accept a plea of guilty or nolo contendere without first determining, by addressing the defendant personally in open court, that the plea is voluntary and is not the result of force or threats or of promises apart from a plea agreement. §§ 720 and 721,[6] which the trial court denied. The defendant was sentenced on all four counts to a total effective sentence of ten years, to be suspended after six years, with five years probation. A condition of his probation was that he receive psychiatric counseling and sex offender treatment.

[6] "[Practice Book] Sec. 720. – WHEN ALLOWED

"A defendant may withdraw his plea of guilty or nolo contendere as a matter of right until the plea has been accepted. After acceptance, the judicial authority shall allow the defendant to withdraw his plea upon proof of one of the grounds in Sec. 721. A defendant may not withdraw his plea after the conclusion of the proceeding at which the sentence was imposed."

"[Practice Book] Sec. 721. – GROUNDS

"The grounds for allowing the defendant to withdraw his plea of guilty after acceptance are as follows:

"(1) The plea was accepted without substantial compliance with Sec. 711;

"(2) The plea was involuntary, or it was entered without knowledge of the nature of the change or without knowledge that the sentence actually imposed could be imposed;

"(3) The sentence exceeds that specified in a plea agreement which had been previously accepted, or in a plea agreement the court had deferred its decision to accept or reject the agreement at the time the plea of guilty was entered;

"(4) The plea resulted from the denial of effective assistance of counsel;

"(5) There was no factual basis for the plea; or

"(6) The plea either was not entered by a person authorized to act for a corporate defendant or was not subsequently ratified by a corporate defendant."

On appeal, the defendant claims that the trial court erred in denying the motions to withdraw his Alford pleas because (1) he was not informed of the precise amount of the fines that could be imposed for violations of General Statutes § 53-21, and therefore the court failed to determined that he fully understood the maximum possible sentence on the charge, (2) the trial court failed to elicit anything more than simple "yes" and "no" responses from the defendant during the plea canvass, (3) the trial court refused to find that the defendant's pleas resulted from denial of effective assistance of counsel pursuant to Practice Book § 721 (4), (4) the pleas were not knowingly and intelligently made because they were entered without the knowledge that a potential witness for the state was in custody, and (5) the trial court failed to permit the pleas to be withdrawn although there was no evidence that the state would have suffered any prejudice.

A guilty plea, once accepted, cannot be withdrawn except with the permission of the court, within its sound discretion, and a denial of a motion to withdraw a plea is reversible only if it appears that there has been an abuse of discretion. Szarwak v. Warden, 167 Conn. 10, 23, 355 A.2d 49 (1974). The defendant bears the burden of showing a plausible reason for the withdrawal of a plea of guilty. State v. Battle, 170 Conn. 469, 475-76, 365 A.2d 1100 (1976); State v. Slater, 169 Conn. 38, 46, 362 A.2d 499 (1975). A trial court is required to permit the withdrawal of a plea of guilty upon proof of any grounds set forth in Practice Book § 721. State v. Collins, 207 Conn. 590, 597, 542 A.2d 1131 (1988); State v. Lasher, 190 Conn. 259, 265, 460 A.2d 970 (1983).

I

The defendant's first claim is that the trial court erred in denying the motions to withdraw his guilty pleas entered pursuant to the Alford doctrine because the court failed to inform him of the precise amount of the fines that could be imposed for violations of General Statutes § 53-21, and therefore failed to ensure that the defendant fully understood the maximum possible sentence on the charge, as required by Practice Book § 711 (4).[7] Practice Book § 721 (1) provides that a motion to withdraw a plea of guilty may be granted if "[t]he plea was accepted without substantial compliance with [Practice Book] Sec. 711." Practice Book § 711 (4) requires that the defendant be advised of the maximum possible sentence.

In the present case, the court informed the defendant that fines could be imposed in addition to a maximum penalty of forty years. The court also explicitly reviewed with the defendant the precise sentence that could be imposed in accordance with the parameters of his plea bargain. In addition, the court informed the defendant that if the plea agreements were not followed he would be allowed to withdraw his pleas. Nothing in the plea bargain contemplated a fine. Accordingly, the failure of the trial court to inform the defendant of the precise

[7] At the hearing on the motions to withdraw his pleas, the defendant argues that the trial court erred in not advising him personally of the mandatory minimum sentence that could be imposed. Practice Book § 711 (2). This claim evades meaningful appellate review because counsel has not briefed this claim. We therefore consider this claim waived. Czarnecki v. Plastics Liquidating Co., 179 Conn. 261, 262 n.1, 425 A.2d 1289 (1779).

amount of the fines that could have been imposed, on the facts of this case, does not constitute defective compliance with Practice Book § 711 (4).

II

The defendant next claims that the court's failure to elicit responses other than "yes" or "no" from the defendant during the canvass of the pleas invalidates his guilty pleas entered pursuant to the Alford doctrine. This claim was not raised in the trial court. Ordinarily, the defendant's failure to raise a timely claim of error to the trial court renders the claim unreviewable on appeal. State v. Badgett, 200 Conn. 412, 417, 512 A.2d 160 (1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 940, 107 S. Ct. 423, 93 L.Ed. 2d 373 (1986). " 'Only in the most exceptional circumstances can and will this court consider a claim, constitutional or otherwise, that has not been raised or decided in the trial court.' State v. Evans, 165 Conn. 61, 69, 327 A.2d 576 (1973). We have recognized, however, as an 'exceptional circumstance' within this doctrine, certain claims involving colorable deprivations of fundamental constitutional rights." State v. Badgett, supra. To the extent that the defendant's claim implicates the failure of the trial court to ensure that the defendant's pleas were entered voluntarily; see Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 243, 89 S. Ct. 1709, 23 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1969); his claim is properly reviewable despite the absence of a timely claim of error before the trial court. State v. Badgett, supra, 418; see also State v. Schaeffer, 5 Conn. App. 378, 381, 498 A.2d 134 (1985).

Single word responses to court questions at plea taking do not ordinarily render the plea involuntary. State v.

Torres, 182 Conn. 176, 178-84, 438 A.2d 46 (1980). State v. Bugbee, 161 Conn. 531, 536, 290 A.2d 332 (1971), explicated the standards for reviewing whether single word responses demonstrate that a defendant's plea was entered intelligently, knowing and voluntarily. "To insulate from attack convictions obtained after a plea of guilty, the trial court is best advised to conduct an on-the-record examination of the defendant which will disclose, inter alia, a full understanding of what the plea connotes and of its consequence and which will demonstrate that the plea of guilty was entered intelligently, knowingly and voluntarily." Id. "If a fair reading of the record satisfies the standards set down in Bugbee, the guilty plea will withstand a constitutional attack based on facial invalidity." State v. Torres," supra, 182. The transcript of the trial court's plea canvass unequivocally demonstrates that the requisite constitutional standards for the acceptance of guilty pleas were met.

The defendant mistakenly relies on rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and the cases decided thereunder for the position that single word responses invalidate guilty pleas. But United States v. Dayton, 604 F.2d 931, 941-43 (5th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 904, 100 S. Ct. 1080, 63 L. Ed. 2d 320 (1980), makes clear that single word responses do not necessarily render guilty pleas constitutionally infirm. Moreover, federal cases construing and applying rule 11 "are of persuasive . . . not controlling, authority." State v. Godek, 182 Conn. 353, 359, 438 A.2d 114 (1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 1031, 101 S. Ct. 1741, 68 L. Ed. 2d 226 (1981).

III

The defendant next claims that the trial court erred in denying his motions to withdraw his guilty pleas entered pursuant to the Alford doctrine because it refused to find that the defendant's pleas resulted from the denial of the effective assistance of counsel without holding an evidentiary hearing.[8] Citing Practice Book § 721 (4), which provides for withdrawal of guilty pleas on the ground of ineffective assistance of counsel, the defendant urges this court to remand this issue to the trial court for an evidentiary hearing.

Generally, " 'a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel is more properly pursued on a petition for new trial or on a petition for a writ of habeas corpus rather than on direct appeal.' " State v. Leecan, 198 Conn. 517, 541, 504 A.2d 480, cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1184 S. Ct. 2922, 91 L. Ed. 2d 550 (1986), State v. Mason, 186 Conn. 574, 578-79, 442 A.2d 1335 (1982). "It is preferable that all of the claims of ineffective assistance, those arguably supported by the record as well as others requiring an evidentiary hearing, be evaluated by the same trier in the same proceeding," State v. Leecan, supra. Leecan, however, did not address the precise issue in this case, namely, whether the trial court erred in declining to hold an evidentiary hearing on the question of whether a defendant's pleas entered pursuant to the Alford doctrine resulted from the denial of effective assistance of counsel under the provisions of Practice Book § 721 (4). The transcript of the hearing on the motions to withdraw the pleas indicates that the trial court was aware of the distinction between the Leecan preference and the grounds of ineffective assistance of counsel as a basis for withdrawal of guilty plea pursuant to Practice Book § 721 (4).[9]

[8] The court stated that: "The record [of the plea canvass] is replete with the questioning by this court of your client concerning the advice of his counsel and the satisfaction of that advice. And the record certainly shows his answers to those questions were appropriate and he acknowledged that he was satisfied with the advice of his attorney and that he was following that advice."

At the hearing on the motions to withdraw his pleas, the defendant argued that his attorney did not inform him of the collateral consequences of entering guilty pleas pursuant to the Alford doctrine, thereby rendering his pleas involuntary. Cf. North Carolina v. Alford, 400 U.S. 25, 29 n.3, 91 S. Ct. 160, 27 L. Ed. 2d 162 (1979). The defendant contends that his attorney should have informed him that his Alford pleas would constitute admission against interest in collateral civil proceedings initiated by the victims' families, whereas pleas of nolo contendere would not.

Although the defendant's attorney may not have informed the defendant of the collateral consequences, if any, of entering guilty pleas pursuant to the Alford doctrine, as opposed to pleas of nolo contendere, only where "such allegations furnish a basis for withdrawal of the

[9] The court stated to the defendant's attorney that: "Some of the things you mentioned, Mr. Williams, may very well be matters that can be brought up on a habeas corpus action. You might even want to take an appeal on my refusal to allow you to withdraw the pleas."

plea under § 721 and are not conclusively refuted by the record of the plea proceedings and other information contained in the court file, [is] an evidentiary hearing . . . required." (Footnote omitted.) State v. Torres, supra, 185-86.

The defendant's allegation that he was denied the effective assistance of counsel because counsel did not inform him of the collateral consequences of his pleas in a civil proceeding does not constitute a basis for withdrawal of the plea under § 721(4). A guilty plea under the Alford doctrine is a "judicial oxymoron in that the defendant does not admit guilt but acknowledges that the state's evidence against him is so strong that he is prepared to accept the entry of a guilty plea nevertheless." State v. Palmer, 196 Conn. 157, 169 n.3, 491 A.2d 1075 (1985). In North Carolina v. Alford, supra, the United States Supreme Court treated such guilty pleas as the "functional equivalent" of a plea of nolo contendere. State v. Palmer, supra n.3; State v. Pena, 16 Conn. App. 518, 533, 548 A.2d 445 (1988). "A plea of nolo contendere has the same legal effect as a plea of guilty on all further proceedings within the indictment. . . . The only practical difference is that the plea of nolo contendere may not be used against the defendant as an admission in a subsequent criminal or civil case." (Emphasis added; citations omitted.) State v. Martin, 197 Conn. 17, 20-21 n.7, 495 A.2d 1028 (1985). As a guilty plea under the Alford doctrine is the "functional equivalent" of a plea of nolo contendere, an Alford plea may not be used against the defendant as an admission in a subsequent civil case. State v. Pena, supra. Accordingly, as a matter of law, the defendant cannot maintain the foregoing as a basis for withdrawal of the plea under § 721 (4). State v. Torres, supra, 185-90.

Further, the record of the plea proceeding conclusively establishes that the defendant's pleas pursuant to the Alford doctrine were entered knowingly, intelligently and voluntarily. "[F]or a plea to be knowing and intelligent, the record must show that the federal constitutional standards were satisfied . . . and that there was substantial compliance with Practice Book § 711 . . . . There is no requirement, however, that the defendant be advised of every possible consequence of such a plea." (Footnote and citations omitted.) State v. Gilnite, 202 Conn. 369, 383, 521 A.2d 547 (1987). The record of the plea proceedings demonstrates that the federal constitutional standards were satisfied and that there was substantial compliance with Practice Book § 711. The defendant's claim that his pleas were not knowing and voluntary because counsel failed to inform him of the nonexistent collateral consequences of his Alford plea is therefore without merit. Accordingly, the trial court did not err in failing to hold an evidentiary hearing on this issue.

IV

The defendant next argues that his pleas of guilty entered pursuant to the Alford doctrine were involuntary because the state failed, before the defendant entered his pleas, to disclose information about a potential state's witness, namely, that the witness was in state custody and therefore any testimony by him could have been subject to state influence.[10] The crux of the defendant's claim appears to be that, but for the omission of this information, the defendant would not have pleaded guilty under the Alford doctrine because this information could have been used to impeach the state's witness at trial.

In Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215 (1963), the United States Supreme Court stated that "suppression by the prosecution of evidence favorable to an accused upon request violates due process where the evidence is material either to guilt or to punishment, irrespective of the good faith or bad faith of the prosecution." "Impeachment evidence as well as exculpatory evidence falls within Brady's definition of evidence favorable to an acccused. United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 676, 105 S. Ct. 3375, 87 L. Ed. 2d 481 (1985); Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150, 154-55, 92 S. Ct. 763, 31 L. Ed. 2d 104 (1972); Brady v. Maryland, supra, 87; United States v. Polizzi, 801 F.2d 1543, 1553 (9th Cir. 1986)." State v. Pollitt, 205 Conn. 132, 142, 531 A.2d 125 (1987). "[E]vidence required to be disclosed must be disclosed at a time when it can be used." State v. Pollitt, 199 Conn. 399, 414, 508 A.2d 1 (1986), on remand, 205 Conn. 132, 531 A.2d 125 (1987).

The defendant is not entitled to impeachment evidence about a state's witness until the witness has been

[10] The state, at the hearing on the motions to withdraw the defendant's pleas, stated that the "witness" would not have been used as a prosecution witness "under any circumstances in any event." The state also claimed that the defendant was aware of the witness, and that the defendant knew the witness was in the custody of the state.

called by the state and has testified on direct examination. Practice Book § 744.[11] Here, the witness was obviously never called to testify by the state, and therefore the defendant was not entitled to information about the criminal "charges pending against the witness known to the prosecuting attorney." Id. The claimed Brady material sought by the defendant could not have been used unless, and until, the witness was called to testify. Accordingly, the state had no obligation to disclose the information before the defendant entered his pleas of guilty pursuant to the Alfred doctrine. As the defendant was not entitled to this information until trial, the unavailability of the information did not render the defendant's pleas of involuntary.

Relying on federal cases, the defendant finally claims that the trial court should have permitted the withdrawal of his pleas because the state would not have suffered any prejudice from their withdrawal. The federal standard for presentence withdrawal motions, derived from dictum in Kercheval v. United States, 274 U.S. 220, 224, 47

[11] "[Practice Book] Sec. 744. [DISCLOSURE BY THE PROSECUTING AUTHORITY – DISCLOSURE AT JUDICIAL DISCRETION] ___ ___ PRIOR RECORD OF WITNESSES

"After a witness called by the state has testified on direct examination, the prosecuting authority shall disclose any record of felony convictions of the witness known to the prosecuting authority and any record of felony or misdemeanor charges pending against the witness known to the prosecuting authority."

S. Ct. 582, 71 L. Ed. 1009 (1927), is any "fair and just" reason. The fair and just reason test has received different interpretations.[12] The prevailing view in the federal courts, however, as stated in United States v. Saft, 558 F.2d 1073, 1083 (2d Cir. 1977), is that there is no occasion to inquire into the matter of prejudice unless the defendant first shows a sufficient reason for being allowed to withdraw his plea.[13] We are persuaded by that view. Although a trial court may, in the exercise of its discretion, consider whether the state will suffer any prejudice in the event that the plea is withdrawn, that consideration does not eliminate the requirement that the defendant must first show a basis for withdrawing the guilty plea under Practice Book § 721. As demonstrated by parts I through IV of this opinion, the defendant failed to make that showing.

There is no error.

In his opinion the other judges concurred.

[12] The minority view is represented by United States v. Savage, 561 F.2d 554, 556 (4th Cir. 1977)(any desire to withdraw the plea before sentence suffices so long as the prosecution fails to establish that it would be prejudiced by the withdrawal).
